A GREAT PRESIDENT RETIRES

VISIONED AND WROTE TREATY OF PEACE ALL NATIONS WANT.

A Victim of the War—Giving the Last Hours of His Manhood's Full Strength to the People.

The magazine section of the New York Times on Sunday devoted ten pages to a review of the eight years of the administration of President Woodrow Wilson, terminating on Friday, March 4th, during which great things have been accomplished for the country. It was a period which gave more beneficial progressive legislation for the people than in any similar period in the history of the nation. This review was accompanied by an editorial which every American could read with profit. In part it said:

It made a world of difference whether throughout the war and at the end of the war we had in the White House a common man, or a man above the common. A President content to patch up the shattered world and set it spinning again in the old grooves would have been overlooked altogether. He never would have helped the nation to find its soul, he would not have found his own. He would have had no part in the work of reconstruction; Europe was full of complacent men of no force or initiative, no imagination, no new ideas—why summon another from overseas? But in this American nation gifted men come to the fore whenever some great public business calls them. They came forth, each at his appointed time, for the achievement of our independence, for the making, interpreting and expounding of our Constitution, for saving the Union and doing away with slavery, even for revoking the edict of banishment decreed against a great party, and for chastising "culpable wealth." As if by predestination, when the war came, one was at the post of duty and of trial who, by his gifts and abilities, seemed to be designated above all others for a service such as no American had ever before been summoned to undertake.

Through the carnage and welter in Europe, above the ruined fields and blackened temples, Woodrow Wilson had sight of a different world, where, as he was to phrase it later, this agony would "not be gone through with again." He was resolved that it should be different, better, and to the work of making it better he devoted all the powers of his mind. Mr. Wilson was prepared for what he undertook by beliefs and convictions matured through a lifetime of labor, study and thought. It was the foundation article of his creed that "the greatest forces in the world and the only permanent forces are the moral forces." He had full faith in constitutional government, no faith in any other; government by military authority he abhorred. He believed in democracy, the rule of the people, but always under constitutional forms and restraints. "Liberty is a privilege of maturity, of self-control," he wrote nearly a score of years ago, "some peoples may have it, others may not." And again in his Columbia University lectures: "Self-government * * * follows upon the long discipline which gives a people self-possession, self-mastery, the habit of order and peace, and common counsel which will not fail them when they themselves become makers of law."

Here we see the reason why at Paris he held that "self-determination was not for all peoples, only for those fit for it." From his studies in history, from the faith that had ripened in his mind, from his firm belief in liberty as a natural right, his love of constitutional government, and his distrust of all government not responsible to the people and administered in their interest, was born that aspiration to serve mankind by striving to give it a safer and saner world to live in which burned in his bosom throughout the war and through the peace negotiations which followed it. In these things we find the sources of his policies and of his acts.

The ethical basis and outline plan of the League of Nations were set forth in his address at the first annual meeting of the League to Enforce Peace, in Washington on May 27, 1916: (1) the right of every people to choose the sovereignty under which they shall live; (2) the right of smaller States to enjoy that respect for their sovereignty and territorial integrity which the powerful nations insist upon; (3) the right of the world "to be free from every disturbance that has its origin in aggression and disregard of the rights of peoples and nations." Further, he was sure the people of the United States would be willing to become partners in any feasible association of nations formed in order to realize these objects and make them secure against violation." These are the foundation concepts of the League of Nations—the rest is but means for their effectuation.

Faithful to this "unceasing purpose," Mr. Wilson, even in asking of Congress on April 2, 1917, a declaration that the state of war existed between Germany and the United States, renewed the expression of his hope for "a steadfast concert of peace," but he clearly saw that "no autocratic government could be trusted to keep faith within it, or to observe its covenants." That thought took concrete form just before the armistice in his proclamation to all the world of the principle that no peace could be made with the Hohenzollerns.

We had been less than a year engaged in war and victory was not yet within view when Mr. Wilson was able to formulate with wonderful foresight and precision the basic principles of the peace. We speak advisedly, for his Fourteen Points, embodied in the address to the two houses of Congress on Jan. 8, 1918, accepted by the Allies with two minor reservations and assented to by Germany in the negotiations for an armistice, actually became the basis and framework of the Treaty of Versailles and the Covenant of the League of Nations. Mr. Lloyd George, three days earlier, had stated the war aims of Great Britain, but the scope of his pronouncement was limited, far less comprehensive, and there was no such clear definition of intent as in Mr. Wilson's Fourteen Points.

A Treaty that put an end to the bloodiest of wars and has become the public law of the greater part of the world through its ratification by some half a hundred nations now needs no defenders.

Surely there was good reason for a feeling of pride in every American bosom when the head of this Republic, a Government of the people, and he a man chosen by the people, became during the war, by common consent, the chief spokesman of the Allied and Associated Powers in presenting their demands and their aims to the enemy. It was an occasion for even greater pride that in the most momentous international business in the world's history he should have held so high a place, should have exercised an influence surpassed by none in molding the Treaty of Peace, should have impressed deeply upon the great pact the stamp of American genius and American respect for law and right. The partisan spirit spares none, not even the highest. Washington was first in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen, but many of his countrymen assailed him with a foulness and indecency of vituperation that far surpassed the ingenuity or the daring of Wilson's foes. Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence, but the Federalists abused his as though he were the meanest malefactor. Lincoln, savior of the Union, was slandered not only by men of the opposite party, but by the abolutionists, and he himself was at one time doubtful of his re-election in 1864. Grover Cleveland, a great President, a man who stood "foursquare to all the winds that blew," who delivered the country from the perils of that silver delusion that had seized upon both parties, was malignantly traduced; ministers of religion who prayed for him were threatened with dismissal from their pulpits. The severe censure visited upon Mr. Roosevelt, most severe from members of his own party, has not been forgotten. It needed but the touch of Time's finger to redress the balance of public judgment upon all these men. They stand secure in their high places.

The right of appeal to posterity may be invoked by every statesman, misjudged by his contemporaries. Already the public judgment has vindicated Mr. Wilson in respect to one decision which has often been brought up against him for censure. Great numbers of Americans felt that we should have declared war against Germany after the sinking of the Lusitania. Throughout the East public feeling ran high, there was a passionate demand for hostile action, and justification was not wanting. "Mr. Wilson was right," said Mr. Choate a few days before his death, "the rest of us were wrong." It is exceedingly doubtful whether the President could have carried the country with him had he then demanded a declaration of war. Congress would have been divided, it might have refused, which would have been an almost irreparable disaster. While the East was hot, the West and South at that moment were more than cool. A year later the Republican National Convention was not warlike, the Democratic Convention at St. Louis went wild over Martin H. Glynn's keynote speech upon the text, "He kept us out of war." The great Mississippi Valley was not for war. Mr. Wilson correctly judged the temper of the country.

And so, as the years roll by and the last traces of party feeling and personal prejudice disappear, and men forget the small things and have memory only of the great ones that really matter, the country will correctly judge Mr. Wilson. A great and high place is reserved for him. There can be no doubt of it. When Truth sits at her elbow History bears false witness against no man, and the true record of Mr. Wilson's service to the world will be an open book. The future inquirer will not be at a loss to discover the sources and appraise the merit of the accusations hurled against him; he will judge them, dismiss them. When a score of years have passed, will any man call his own sanity in question by insisting that Woodrow Wilson sought to override the Constitution, destroy our sovereignty, and embroil us in all the wars in Europe? For one thing it can never be charged against him that he was false to his ideals, that he ever betrayed his principles and his followers. To falter at the

HEAD NURSE FOR HOSPITAL

POSITION ACCEPTED AND WILL BE HERE AT OPENING MAR. 15.

York Springs Man Sends Call for All to Pull Together for the Emergency Fund.

Miss Carrie E. Stout, a graduate nurse, visited Gettysburg last week on invitation of the Board and went through the hospital and then heard offer of position of Head Nurse of the Annie M. Warner Hospital. Answer was delayed for a few days but on Monday word was received that the position was accepted. Miss Stout will bring two assistant graduate nurses with her and will be here on March 14, to prepare for opening on Tuesday, March 15.

Everything is in readiness for the opening. The auxiliary has been busy with completing the supplies of linen closets, and a number of other preparations have been made.

The Emergency Fund of $5000, to provide the running expenses at the opening until State aid can be secured and until there is some interest coming from the endowment, is only three-fifths subscribed. The $3000 already subscribed has been a wonderful free will offering of our people. To get the remaining two-fifths will likely take some canvassing by the directors and physicians. From certain parts of the county few subscriptions to the emergency fund have been made, and with effort that fund could easily be sent over the top.

From York Springs comes $10 to the fund with the following encouragement:

"I would like to see the good people of Adams county match the tens already given. We don't want the institution to be a failure. Our county people should respond to the call Now don't be stingy but try and help along. If we all pull together it will be easy. Just think of the money that is carried out of the county every year to other hospitals. Give freely for the Lord loves a cheerful giver. I trust the people will give their mite."

Subscriptions to the emergency fund since our last report are the following:

$100: Mrs. Charles Morris Young.
$25: Lodge B. P. O. Elks, Gettysburg.
$15: Fred S. Faber.
$10: Rev. I. B. Crist, of St. Thomas, Franklin county; Mrs. C. B. Young, Edward J. Farrell, Roy E. Zinn, Mrs. Roy E. Zinn, Harmon E. Zinn, Eleanor Zinn, Merville E. Zinn, Guy G. A GREAT PRESIDENT RETIRES.

supreme moment, to desert a cause through timidity or for selfish advantage—that is a blunder that has blighted many a high career. Mr. Wilson was lion-hearted in defending and forwarding his great purposes. He found new courage as foes multiplied, fresh reserves of strength as their assaults grew fiercer, until at last he fell, grievously stricken, upon the very field of battle, giving the last hours of his manhood's full strength and vitality to the American people in his effort to make them understand what his noble aspirations meant for them. It was a dark hour for the world's millions when he faltered and fell. He might not have been able to accomplish all that he desired, yet we cannot but feel that, had he been spared to continue the struggle, his powers of appeal and his resources of leadership would have compelled a different result.

But Mr. Wilson's ideas survive, the Covenant lives, the cause for which he strove is deathless. The Old World reels and is shaken by alarms because misguided men defeated his plan to unite all the peoples of the world in the compact of peace. The nations again beseech us to give them the help he promised, to hold aloof no longer, but to join them in determining the grave questions that remain unsolved. Join them we shall and must; it cannot be otherwise, unless men have gone altogether mad. And when the noble work for which he toiled with unflagging zeal and devotion is achieved, even though men who come after him may give it their name, it will stand through all time as the memorial of its chief builder, a great American President.

Don't Treat Kidneys Rough, Warns Dr. Carey, Specialist

Constant Flushing May Injure the Delicate Organism and Seldom Removes the Poisonous Deposits.

Now that Dr. Carey, kidney and bladder specialist, has retired from active practice, he generously warns people that even the smallest symptoms of kidney trouble should have serious attention.

Backache, for instance, puffiness under or specks floating before the eyes, heavy feet and dry skin, are also danger signals.

"Thousands die yearly because they neglect their kidneys," says Dr. Carey, "and I feel upon retiring that I should tell all who even suspect kidney or bladder trouble about my prescription, Marshroot, which, during my active practice, has cured thousands of all kinds of kidney ailments."

This prescription has been given to pharmacists generally throughout America and is dispensed by them under the name Dr. Carey's Marshroot, a name that every sufferer from kidney trouble should remember. Shuman's Drug Store can supply you
